Spurred on by the score of 60 to the figures raised to the attack with a fierceness that counteracted all other considerations. The Yale team, however, might weight of their rush line broke down Yale's defence. Yard by yard, the fourth and fifth touchdowns were scored and the ball was brought almost to the Yale goal line and then with a mighty heave fourth and fifth were sent through the touchdowns. Guard easily kicked a goal and the first half ended 12 3 in favor of the Tigers.

Shortly before the half ended the only 'star' runner was made, both running for Princeton's 20 yard line to Yale's 13 yards. When Benjamin overtook him during the second half, Eugene overwhelmed the Elis and three touchdowns were made. Baird ought to have kicked all three goals but missed badly and when the whistle blew Princeton had points to Yale 6.

It was no prospect that awaited the cheering fans. The prospect that awaited the morning heavy rain clouds hung over the field and with 11 there was a steady drizzle that showed little sign of clearing up till the attendance was over 20,000.

The crowd on the viaduct and Speedway Hill cheered as the game began. At 2:03 o'clock the Yale team came on the field and a minute later Princeton's half came on. The first play was to forward Yale won the loss and the crowd defied the east wind, cheering Princeton the ball. At 2:12 the Princeton

Fake Reports.

Now that the election is over and the people have returned an enormous verdict in support of protection and sound money, the newspapers are filled with all sorts of speculations concerning the policy of the incoming administration. Some are honest, but a great deal of the matter that appears is of a sensational character without any foundation in fact. This is a disgraceful phase of so-called modern journalism. An irresponsible writer works up a bogus interview with some prominent man, or fills his columns with a "fake" story based on an imaginary "tip," and then the profound editor proceeds to point out the danger or inconsistency of such a course.

Scarcely a day passes that some of these space writers do not work off one or more of these sensational stories. It was not long since that an interview appeared giving the views of Senator Sherman on the legislation of the coming session, but was almost immediately followed by an article stating that the Senator, that he was not responsible for the views attributed to him. A similar mark for this sort of work is Chairman Hanna. One paper made him say that under no consideration would he take a Cabinet office but Mr. Hanna said nothing of the kind. The statement was sent out by one of the "sensational" writers who cared nothing for facts so long as he had a sensational story. In another paper Mr. Hanna is made to say that the Administration will do something for silver in order to please the silver Republicans. This is more of the same kind of work, but we read in the editorial of one paper that Mr. Hanna is talking too much and therefore the writer proceeds to argue the danger of such a policy as is attributed to the Republican Chairman.

One of the most common papers makes this basis of an editorial, that it is to be hoped to revise the long since exploded yarn that Chairman Hanna was really in favor of a straddle on the currency, but was forced to adopt the gold standard by reason of the persistent efforts of ex-Senator Platt. Either the editor of the Democratic paper in question has been enjoying a Rip Van Winkle nap, or else he has little regard for the truth. When this story was originally sprung upon the public, Hon. Charles E. Smith, in a single editorial, stamped it out in a statement copied in THE WHIG at the time, saying that he had been given the rough draft of the financial plank of the platform as it was prepared several days prior to the convention after full consultation with Major McKinley and under the immediate direction of Mr. Hanna. Mr. Smith published the McKinley-Hanna plank in allied columns with the convention plank as adopted and the result was practically identical in substance and form. There never was anything in the story that Mr. Hanna was in favor of a straddle and its revival at this time is simply stupid.

We refer to this style of journalism, namely, to manufacture an absurd statement and then treat it as a serious proposition, to call attention to the utter unavailability of much of the stuff that appears in print. The papers responsible for it are working a great injury to the influence of the press as an educational power. Everything is sacrificed to mere sensationism and the effect is to distrust the people.

Too Transparent.

The New York World shrieks that if the incoming Administration attempts to enact protective legislation the people will repudiate it (two years hence). If the World is so sure of its ground why not leave the matter to the people? The World has repeatedly declared that it abandoned many of the principles for which McKinley stands and now that it has been saved from the reckless purposes of the Bryan wing of the Democratic party, if it were sincere in its state, it would have been entirely satisfied to see the new Administration wrecked in the middle of the term.

It is not powerful and it is not honest. The great trouble with the World is that it knows that a proper tariff law that will carry necessary protection to American industry is just what the people demand, and it is trying to prevent such an enactment because it will strengthen the Administration with the people, and at the same time absolutely prove what is now generally known to be a fact, namely, that the World and other free trade papers have been lying concerning the protective sentiment all these years. There are just a few things the World has yet to learn, one of which is that the incoming Republican Administration will not turn to its columns for advice. Another is that it is giving its own case away by these hysterical efforts to show that the American people do not want the very thing they have just voted for by an immense majority.

Presching and Practice.

The New York Sun says: Gen. John B. Gordon, of Georgia, is lecturing on "The Last Days of the Confederacy," and concludes his lecture with a patriotic peroration, in the course of which he waves the American flag over his head. In this peroration at Rochester the other night he said that "we (the living Confederates) are ready to join with you in waving aloft this proud banner (the flag) caught up the American flag from the table and held it over his head, and we join with you all who love that flag, in saying that by God's help there shall never come to it one blot or stain; that as long as the ages remain, that flag shall be the most proud and potent emblem of human freedom in all the world."

Five words, but a few days ago the Gen. John B. Gordon was entirely willing to help put a blot and stain on the flag. He expressed Mr. Bryan's election in the President's name, and made the American flag a flag of dishonor and degradation.

Talk is cheap.

making 20 Bryan votes comes from Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Washington, and Wyoming; and they are credited almost wholly to the Populistic contingent in the Bryan combination, aided by silver Republicans.

The discreditable distinction of contributing about three-quarters of the Bryan electoral vote, and thus making impressive the repudiation demonstration, otherwise insignificant, belongs alone to the eleven Southern States, included in the secessionary Confederacy, with Missouri added. From the States of the North, outside of the five mining-camp States, which went for silver as a matter of seeming self-interest, Bryan carried Kansas, the head centre of Populism, Nebraska, Bryan's own State, and the new and little States of South Dakota, Washington, and Wyoming, the three having only eleven votes, all told.

Except for the eleven old Confederate States, therefore, Bryan would have made a pitiful show in the electoral college. He would have got only about one-tenth of the whole number of Presidential electors without their help and that of Missouri. Kentucky, Maryland and West Virginia broke away from the solid South of the past and ranged themselves with the forces of order and civilization. The rest put upon themselves the heaviest stigma of supporting repudiation and social disorder.

Moreover, these twelve Bryan States of the South are all old communities. The few Northern votes won by that vile cause, in the trans-Mississippi States exclusively, came from new and frontier communities where the enlightening influences of civilization have not yet produced a reasonable conservatism. As time goes on and they learn the harsh lessons of experience, they will do better. But what hope is there for the old Confederate South thus practically segregated from the ripper and more genuine civilization of the Union?

It is a serious question and the Southern people, in the interests of the larger material development so much desired by them, should set themselves to its consideration.

WEEKLY

LOCAL MATTERS.

just as sure as night follows day. A warm and rainy October caused slack selling in the Dress Goods Department. Consequently—a much larger stock than usual at this time of year. There is only one solution for the problem. We've got to tempt you by price—if your needs don't demand it—to relieve this department of its overstock. We propose to put such figures on our stock of Dress Fabrics, that will rapidly deplete the crowded shelves.

YARD STICKS AND SCISSORS OUGHT TO BE VERY BUSY THIS WEEK.

1 Lot half-wool Diagonal Suitings, regular price 29c; in two-toned effects, 38 inches wide. Price, 17c.

1 lot all-wool Mixed Suitings, 36 inches wide; manufactured this season to retail at 50c. Price, 25c.

1 lot 40-inch Novelty, styles and quality equal to most of the 75c fabrics; retailed all the season at half a dollar. Price, 39c.

1 lot 56-inch all-wool Ladies' Cloth Suitings, in plain colors and mixtures; regular retail price 75 cents. Price, 49c.

1 lot Scotch Novelty, 38 inches wide, imported to retail at $1.00 per yard. This is one of the best values we ever offered in dress goods. Price, 59c.

About 25 different styles in German and French Novelty, all in single dress patterns; retailed all the season at $1.25 and $1.37; all put into one lot for this sale. Price, 89c.

About 20 high-class Dress Fabrics, in single dress patterns, containing some of the choicest offerings in Novelty this season. Not a fabric that has retailed less than $1.50 and most of them at $1.75 and more. Price, $1.19.

About a dozen pieces of elegant quality Black Fancy Dress Goods in silk and wool and mohair and wool effects; 45 inches wide. Retailed all the season at $1.50 per yard. Price, 98c.

THESE PRICES FOR ONE WEEK ONLY.

Window Shades

Don't Last Forever.

One thing or another ruins them. Unlike other home furnishings their condition and appearance are noticed by passers-by as well as by those who enter the house. First impressions are hard to efface—the little matter of window shades is of great importance.

We know of nothing else costing a like amount of money that will improve appearance of a home so much as new shades. Consider, madam, do your window shades correspond with the other house-furnishings? They should do THAT much, at least.
